1. Radar Installations at Potsdam-Golm (Z63 - Z53)

- a. The project is an old German installation (sketch attached) which is about 35m high and is located in the barracks' ground of Potsdam-Eiche. The barracks are for the most part destroyed. A small unit identified by shoulder boards edged in red inhabits the barracks. Despite a two-hour observation there was no vehicular traffic.
- b. The second tower is 55m in height and is surrounded by the former Reichs Labor Service barracks, which contains approximately 120 Signal Corps troops. The installation is supplied with electricity by the local power net and has an emergency generating unit. It has a certain similarity to double-poled equipment (sic) but no similarity to the American radar equipment at Tempelhof. A radio vehicle [REDACTED] was observed entering the barracks. An Air Corps vehicle, occupied by soldiers of the Soviet Air Corps, which is stationed there, [REDACTED]. On the day of observation the installation was not in operation. 25X1C

2. Munitions Depot at Satz Korn (Z54)

According to railway station personnel, the barracks east of the Satzkorn RR station and the nearby ex-Wehrmacht camp is being used as a munitions depot. It contains infantry ammunition, which apparently is being used at the Döberitz (Z65) troop training grounds.
